International Collective in Support of Fishworkers (ICSF)Supporting Sustainable Small-Scale Fisheries

Introduction

The International Collective in Support of Fishworkers (ICSF) is an international non-governmental organization that works to support fishworkers and fishing communities, particularly those involved in small-scale and artisanal fisheries. The organization focuses on promoting sustainable fisheries, social equity, gender justice, decent work, and the active participation of fishing communities in fisheries-related decision-making.Small-scale fisheries are an important source of employment, food, income, and cultural identity for many coastal communities. However, fishworkers and their communities can face challenges such as limited access to resources, changing fisheries policies, environmental pressures, and difficulties in participating in decision-making processes. ICSF works to ensure that these communities and their concerns receive appropriate recognition at national, regional, and international levels.

Supporting Small-Scale Fisheries

Small-scale fisheries play an important role in the livelihoods of millions of people around the world. They contribute to local economies and food systems while supporting communities that have traditionally depended on fishing and related activities.

ICSF works with fishworker organizations and other like-minded groups to strengthen the position of small-scale fishing communities. Through advocacy, research, information sharing, and collaboration, the organization supports greater recognition of the contribution made by fishworkers.

The organization also promotes approaches that balance the economic needs of fishing communities with the protection and responsible use of marine resources.

Promoting Sustainable Fisheries

Sustainable fisheries are essential for maintaining healthy marine ecosystems and ensuring that fishing communities can continue to depend on fisheries in the future. Responsible fisheries management requires consideration of both environmental sustainability and the livelihoods of people who depend on fishing.

ICSF contributes to discussions and policy processes related to fisheries management and sustainable development. Its work encourages greater attention to the needs and experiences of small-scale fishing communities when fisheries policies are developed.

By promoting responsible resource use and community participation, ICSF supports efforts to create fisheries systems that are environmentally responsible, socially equitable, and economically sustainable.

Fishworkers' Rights and Community Participation

Protecting fishworkers' rights is an important part of creating fair and sustainable fisheries. Fishing communities should have opportunities to participate in decisions that affect their livelihoods and access to natural resources.

ICSF works to strengthen the participation of fishworkers and their organizations in fisheries governance. Collaboration with community organizations and other stakeholders helps bring local knowledge and experiences into policy discussions.

Greater participation can help fisheries policies better reflect the realities faced by fishing communities and contribute to more inclusive decision-making.

Gender Justice in Fisheries

Gender equality and gender justice are important components of sustainable fisheries. Women contribute significantly to fishing communities through activities such as fish processing, marketing, trading, household management, and other fisheries-related work.

Recognizing these contributions helps create a more inclusive fisheries sector. ICSF promotes greater awareness of gender-related issues and supports approaches that recognize the important roles played by women in fishing communities.

Promoting gender justice can help improve opportunities, participation, and recognition for women involved in fisheries and strengthen the overall resilience of fishing communities.

Research, Advocacy and Knowledge Sharing

ICSF supports fisheries-related research, documentation, advocacy, and knowledge sharing. Information and research can help communities, organizations, policymakers, and other stakeholders better understand the challenges and opportunities associated with small-scale fisheries.

Through publications, resources, discussions, and collaborative activities, ICSF contributes to the exchange of knowledge on fisheries and fishing communities. These efforts can support informed decision-making and encourage greater recognition of the needs of fishworkers.

Vision

ICSF envisions a future where fishing communities and fishworkers can live with dignity and secure their rights to life and livelihood. It supports a future based on democracy, equity, sustainable development, and responsible use of natural resources.

This vision places fishing communities at the center of efforts to create fairer and more sustainable fisheries.

Mission

The mission of ICSF is to support fishing communities and fishworker organizations and empower them to participate meaningfully in fisheries. Its work promotes principles such as decent work, equity, gender justice, sustainable development, and responsible fisheries management.

Through collaboration, advocacy, research, and knowledge sharing, ICSF seeks to strengthen the ability of fishworkers and their organizations to contribute to fisheries decision-making.
